

David Legg is a graduate of University College London, and attended London Theological Seminary; he ministered in Devon (UK), and now writes and publishes in Hampshire. He is married to Sue, and they are members of Trinity Church Liphook. They have three sons, a daughter-in-law and a grandson. His other publications include Covenants for Evangelicals, Humour in the Bible, The Right End of the Stick, Local Church Membership, and several Bible study guides.

'How do we know which things in the Bible are types?'

'What does it mean to be made in God's image?'

A fresh and unified approach to biblical typology and imagery that aims to be immediately understandable, compelling and then subsequently helpful as a reference text.

The Bible's own teaching about typology is analysed in order to derive practical definitions of type and image. These definitions are then used to apply biblical typology and imagery to daily life. The wisdom of writers including Pink, Fairbairn and others is sampled and compared.

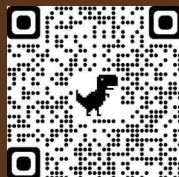

Readers will be able to identify biblical types for themselves, understand their significance, and put typology into practice in their own lives, those of their families and churches, at work, in the home, and in relationships, in such a way as to honour and bring glory to God through the Lord Jesus Christ.

'This is a very helpful work on typology: It is easy reading; gives many examples; provides a good (not too narrow) definition of a type; and doesn't restrict types to just those explicitly identified as such in the Bible (so being parallel with the Bible's practice of not labelling all parables with the word "parable"). I recommend it for those who enjoy types, those who have never heard of the word, and those who are suspicious of types.'

Robert C. Newman is Emeritus Professor of New Testament at Biblical Theological Seminary, Hatfield, Pennsylvania (USA), and former director of the Interdisciplinary Biblical Research Institute (IBRI). His doctorate is in theoretical astrophysics from Cornell University, and he has a M.Div. from Faith Theological Seminary, and an S.T.M. in Old Testament from Biblical Theological Seminary. He has done additional graduate work in religious thought at the University of Pennsylvania, in hermeneutics and biblical interpretation at Westminster Theological Seminary, and in biblical geography at Jerusalem University College. He is a past President of the Evangelical Theological Society, a professional society of nearly 3000 theologians.

Covenant
Books UK

Biblical Types and Images

David W. Legg with Robert C. Newman

Biblical Types and Images

Understanding and Applying Biblical Typology

David W. Legg with Robert C. Newman

Covenant
Books UK

Covenant
Books UK